'Atrocities Against Women In India And Human Rights'

Sambhoji S. S.

Associate Professor & Head,
R. C. Shahu College, Kolhapur (Maharashtra)

Human rights are fundamental rights which allow the person to pertain human dignity. According to Human Rights, both men and women have equal rights and equal opportunity of development. But in reality women are supposed to be inferior to men. They are always received bias treatment. In India, woman is suffering from various kinds of abuses. Actually if woman is empowered, her thoughts and values develop a good family and automatically a good nation. Therefore women empowerment has a great importance.

Statement of Problem:

'Yatra naryastu puhyante ramnte tatra Devata' This is Indian culture. Indian society respects women as deity. But still there is a big problem of gender discrimination in national development. In the development process women have subordinate status. There are various Acts and laws to protect dignity of women but they are not practically implemented. As such, the researcher decided to study the problem under the title of 'Atrocities against Women in India'

Objectives:

- To study the Concept of 'Human Rights'
- To study Human Rights relating to women
- To study the Atrocities against Women in India
- To draw conclusions
- To provide suggestions

Human Rights:

The ancient Greeks were the first civilization to develop a clearly articulated and coherent body of thought that ultimately affected modern concepts of 'Human Rights'. Although they were not the first to consider the nature of justice, they broke new ground in their evaluation of the individual and the relationship between lawgivers and those they ruled.
